American Steamships.

A few years ago, or previous to the war, the American flag ruled the sea, so far as commerce was concerned. American vessels were found in every port, and did by far more of the carrying trade of the world, than the shipping of any other country.

But since the war all this has been changed. Whether it is that American shipping was driven from the seas by confederate cruisers during the war, as some hold, or that our protective tariff, high prices of labor, inflated currency, and the prohibition of the floating of foreign bottoms under the American flag, have combined to drive the ocean trade to other countries, as the free trade men assert, it is not necessary to inquire. It remains a fact that since the war the number of American vessels engaged in the ocean passenger and carrying trade has been small indeed, and growing "smaller by degrees and beautifully less." It is no less true than discreditable to our country that, for some years past, there has not been a passenger steamship on the Atlantic carrying the American flag! All the lines of splendid "floating palaces" plying between this country and Europe, have been built and owned on the east side of the water.

In view of these facts, the pride and exultation of the people of Philadelphia is pardonable, when, a few weeks ago, the "Pennsylvania" was launched at that city, and started on her trial trip to Europe, from which she has returned after a successful rowed passage. This vessel was built of Pennsylvania iron, by Pennsylvania workmen, and is owned by a Pennsylvania company, and thus we have at least one genuine American line of ocean steamships commenced. It is just now announced that a second vessel of this line, the "Ohio"—has been completed and started on her trial trip. It is also promised that there will be a further increase before the year closes, it being expected that there will be two more steamers plying on the broad Atlantic in the course of a month or so. And some people are even indulging the belief that, before another decade shall have passed away, there will be one United States steamer on the Atlantic for every State there is in the Union.

This is certainly occasion for rejoicing by all who have a pride in the prosperity of America. To be sure, it is not much, compared with what it should be. Only four American steamers upon the Atlantic! Not very prosperous are the maratime interests of our country yet. But it is gratifying to know that they are unmistakably improving, and give signs of returning to the superiority of the good old days. Let Americans rejoice thereat.

—The Graphic thus sings the praises of another hero: Is this a good or bad year for engineers on railroad trains? They lose their lives and win immorcality. Guild, the brave man who held the train in check at Meadow Brook, last spring, saved the life of every passenger on board, but lost his own. Wife and little one, as well as personal safety, he laid on the altar of duty, and died a hero. And now, out from the darkness of an early evening, on the Chicago and Rock Island road, comes another hero in common life, whose one great act of self-control and self-sacrifice saved scores of others at the cost of the life that men hold dear. John Rafferty, engineer of the night express train, saw that his path was obstructed, reversed the engine, applied the patent air-brakes, saved his charge, and fell dead under his engine. It is a simple record of the reporter's pencil, but every touch of the picture is replete with pathos. The dead hero left a wife and three children in Chicago. They, at least, should never know a day's want. As for the brave dead, the marble column that adorns the grave of the insignificant could not embellish his last brave deed.

A Quiet Sunday in Cleveland.

The authorities of Cleveland, Ohio, tried to enforce the Sunday liquor law last Sunday, for the first time, throughout the seventeen wards of that city. The effort was quite successful, according to the Leader. That journal says that its reporters were on the alert all day, and from their testimony it would appear that the city enjoyed one of most quiet, orderly Sundays that it has known for years. The sensible determination of the saloon keepers on Friday evening to respect the law and close their barrooms, was carried out to an extent which made it difficult, if not impossible, for the poor men to spend any of their last week's wages for rum. There was an unusual siege upon the physicians for all sorts of prescriptions containing alcohol, and there was, of course, an exceptionably large and enthusiastic begira of the inconsolables to the cool groves and bounteone drinking places of Rocky River. This is as favorable a result as was hoped for. There has been heretofore a great deal of Sunday drunkenness at Rocky River, and it may be henceforth somewhat increased. But the general saving will be great. Where one additional drinker will go to the River and make a beast of himself on Sunday, a dozen will be prevented by the Sunday law from getting drunk at home.

The Leader says: "The plan of the saloon keepers is to test the constitutionality of the law. If public opinion is what it should be, this will not in the end avail anything. The principle of the Sunday law is unquestionably constitutional. It is believed by all those interested to the contrary, that its form and letter are also in harmony with the fundamental law of the State. If, however, it should prove in any event that the ordinance and constitution clash in any small points of detail, they can easily be harmonized. There is a Constitutional Convention at Columbus and a municipal Council in Cleveland whose business it is to look after just such things as these. It is only required that the respectable, law-abiding people of the city shall stand up to the issue, stiffen the backs of the Council and city officers, and insist that the law shall be enforced on future Sundays as it was done yesterday."

The Auburn Commissioners of Excise should be encouraged. If Cleveland, with 100,000 population, can enforce the Sunday liquor law, then Auburn, with only 20,000, ought to do it.

—We read of a young school mistress in Ohio, who, being like unto the icicle which hangs on Dian's temple, though extremely handsome, is vowed to Minerva and the spelling-books. Being much embarrassed on her way to and from her academy by the admiring young men of the vicinage, and not being able to keep a lion to ride upon, she has trained a faithful Tray to guard her. This sagacious dog knows exactly what is meant when he sees a juvenile gentleman in his Sunday clothes waving a pocket-handkerchief, and the too ardent wooer is sure to be bitten and gnawed. Forty mistaken Endymions have already been lacerated.

—Miss Sarah A. Gale, who has been a teacher in the public schools of Boston for thirty-six years, has resigned and gone to Europe. We take it for granted that she must have been a good teacher, or she could not have kept her position so long, and especially through the stormy reformation of the Boston public schools, made while Horace Mann was State Superintendent of Education. We do not read that Miss Gale has received a pension, but she deserves one quite as much as if her services had been rendered upon a less peaceful field.

—The English government proposes to enroll a body of men in India, to make a systematic slaughter of the tigers and hyenas. The life in the peninsula of Bengal from wild beasts is fearful, it being estimated about ten thousand persons are killed annually in this way.

—The Boston Transcript thinks that the "ambitious youth who fired the Ephesian dome" was a travelling agent for a patent fire-extinguisher.

Current Paragraphs.

Rhode Island, after agitating the matter for about a hundred years, has raised $4,000 towards a monument for Roger Williams. Work will begin when the sum amounts to $115,000.

—Twenty-five hundred people gathered at St. Paul's Church, Nashville, on the 21st instant, to offer praise and thanksgiving for the abatement of cholera in the city and throughout the State.

—A not very courageous individual remarks: If Mont Blanc were a solid lump of gold and in order to become the owner of it we had nothing to do but to go in Prof. Wise's baloon and take possession of the same, we would a thousand times rather sit down on the shore of Massachusetts Bay and starve to death. For we then should have at least the stern satisfaction of knowing where we were and what we were doing.

—A negro cook in Macon, Ga., who had hold of a stove door when it was struck by lightning last Sunday, experienced a temporary paralysis from her hand to the elbow, while a spot on her finger showed the mark of the fluid.

—A little girl fell from a cherry tree near Allentown, Pa., the other day, and, her clothes catching in the fence, was suspended, head downwards. When found, she was black in the face, and was with difficulty resuscitated.

—One of the pilgrim fathers, a worthy man and simple-minded deacon, was in the habit of drawing his salary every Saturday afternoon in silver, and dispensing it among the poor people on the way home from the treasury—half a dollar to one, a quarter to another, and so on, until he had not much to bring back to his wife. She, mindful that charity begins at home, instructed the treasurer, when giving her husband his salary, to tie it up in a handkerchief with so many and such tight knots that he could not dispense it in driblets. On arriving at the first house he fumbled for a long time, but vainly. "Dear friend," said he to the proprietor, "it is evident that the Lord intended the whole of it for thee;" and so saying, he gave the handkerchief to her, and went home empty-handed.

—The whole number of headstones that will be required for the graves in the national cemeteries is 252,797, and it is not believed that the appropriation of last congress will be sufficient to supply that number, even should the war department select the cheapest material offered, and this is certainly not desirable, as there would be no use of putting up any stones except such as will be of the most durable character, and stand the test of time. The contract for the stones will be awarded early in August.
