LEECHBURG, Pa. (AP)—Royd, Raising 10 children poses many problems, not the least of which is how to support them on $70 a week. Varner became the father of a fourth set of twins recently. He also got a $5 pay hike and now earns $70 a week to support his wife and 10 children.

How do the Varners do it?
"It's pretty hard to say. It's pretty tough," remarked Varner, 27, a tire service company employe.

Pressed for a more explicit answer, Varner said simply: "We live on what we have."

Varner and his wife, also 27, live in a two-story, four-room house near this western Pennsylvania community, about 10 miles northeast of Pittsburgh.

He credits good family health with helping to keep the family budget balanced.

"My children have been sick very little," Varner said, "that helps a lot."

He went to work in the sales and service department of a tire service company at nearby Oklahoma, Pa., about 14 months ago and calls it "the best place I've ever worked."

Before that he did not have a steady job and worked when he could, Varner recalls.

Mrs. Varner said she and her husband wanted a big family when they were married about 7½ years ago, "but we weren't figuring on having them all so soon."

She says she has no regrets about the size of her family, adding: "I imagine I'd go crazy if I didn't have a bunch of kids to holler at me and run after."

The Varners had their fourth set of twins about a week ago. The first set were born soon after their first wedding anniversary. There have been two single births, also. Of the 10 children, seven are girls.
